

Interesting lettering and symbols on thimbles

including thimbles of thimble clubs, collectors and societies etc

as well as thimbles with cryptic pictorial messages

Are you fascinated by various lettering – not the hallmarks nor the maker's marks – but something more specific – on your thimbles? Sometimes it is lettering of a commemorative or an historic event, others just inscribed with some unusual words or symbols. None of the following thimbles fall into any previous Learn More About...Thimbles topics: not advertisements, slogans, scenic, placenames, patents, brands etc.

Some of the lettering is on an applied badge – probably done at the time of the commission?

It is as broad as thimble collecting but the occasion for the lettering or words or symbols is largely unknown: all eras (but largely ignoring contemporary thimbles), all countries and different materials are included, concentrating on the unusual. Who made some of the thimbles – for which occasion, tho some are self-explanatory – were they one-offs or made for commercial purposes? If they are of sterling, we usually know the maker.

I will remove the thimble if it becomes part of a new topic.

Quite a few have military connections, many from World War I. I have found a few examples of war propaganda thimbles and I have included them here, having no other place for them.

You will notice a preponderance of thimbles for various thimble clubs or thimble collecting, sewing etc – they just need to be recorded.

I don't believe these are jeweller's inscriptions or monograms added after manufacture, in a cartouche.

I first encountered many of these thimbles in the Thimble Society of London catalogues. Most are rare and very few examples have been encountered: so well worth recording for posterity? I have combed Gay Ann Rogers, Edwin Holmes and John von Hoelle's thimble books for any clues. Those books date from the 1980s and our knowledge has moved on.

I would love for this topic to become a repository of oddities, mystery thimbles – the more cryptic the lettering, the better.

Some are included here just to record them as they are rare. They are made of sterling silver, gold, brass, steel, copper and aluminium, even a few china and plastic.

In 2022 I added a section at the end: thimbles from 18th and 19th century that have pictorial or 'cryptic' messages around the band in the form of everyday objects. One day the meaning of these messages may become apparent, so recorded here for that time.

Beryl Frank "In the 1970s Roz Belford, an astute retailer of thimbles ... discovered that Lenain had carefully stored the original dies for their thimbles ... Some of these thimbles were reissued for export to the United States. ... The size is marked on the thimble ... If FRANCE is stamped on the thimble, it was made in the 1970s."

The reissue wording ends with an exclamation mark.

RH

Charles Horner Chester 1919

what a puzzle this lettering is! RH with numerals – (ignore the RH graphic above of 1919 – a typo – should read 1918)

lower: a date '1918' + '60' - on a wider band

there is then the intertwined WS or SW capped by more numerals on the verso that isn't meant as a monogram?

I recently encountered a query from a German member in a 1986 TCI Bulletin, asking about this thimble -
"It seems that these marks were pressed during the production of the thimble, not later ... Perhaps it is for a firm's name or an anniversary date?"

no-one ever attempted an answer and now - late in 2020 – a thimble discovery with almost identical markings -

by James Fenton

there has been a suggestion that this is an anniversary date

the date could be 19 January (numerals from the monogram) and the date is 60 years in 1918 (so 1858) they could have been privately engraved using plain thimbles ...

Pictorial or cryptic messages on mid-18th to mid-19th century thimbles

In 2022 I added this section: thimbles from 18th century that have cryptic or secret coded messages punched or engraved around the band in the form pictures of everyday domestic objects
One day the meaning of these messages will become apparent: they are recorded here so that they aren't lost

I don't know a term for this group of thimbles; so for now they are known as Pictorial thimbles

These thimbles first came to our attention as thimble collectors. in Brian Read's book which has hundreds of drawings of thimbles found in archaeological digs

Two of these interesting thimbles are illustrated (drawings 289-290)

They are all made of base metals, including bronze or a copper-alloy – a few additional examples have emerged

trellis – scissors – thimble – key – bottle

Read #289 sketch

Read #290 sketches

bird - key - scissors - flower - trellis - cartouche - wishbone or stirrup

scissors - thimble - trellis - pincushion - woman - beaded cross found buried in Staffordshire

initial 'A' - trellis - two cups - two rackets or clubs (may even be spoons) - jug-like 'gin' bottle

tho this thimble with an almost identical set of pictorials is very badly corroded, the message symbols aren't damaged

two cups - two rackets or clubs (may even be spoons) - initial 'A' - jug-like 'gin' bottle - trellis - leaves - flowers - ASH

this thimble almost doesn't fit as a pictorial - only the linking word ASH gives it a place

several linked elongated rondels - flower in eash - ASH

initial A - club - rose - cartouche - beehive - dog - fish
